

Soulmate

You are my soulmate
Bound together by God's will and God's fate
We complete each other
And we are stronger together

Once upon a time, Plato once referred to the fake god Zeus
To explain the creation of male and female

Plato said Zeus feared humanity's power
Supposedly, we were once together like glue,
But he split us into two
And now we are without our piece that makes us strong
And we spend our life looking for our other half

A beautiful notion that makes me laugh
You and I know the truth.

The true God created male and female equal to each other
He made you from my rib to be my children's mother
He made me to be your protector
I'm your provider
And, together, our heads stay above water.
You lean on me, and I lean on you.

I am Prince Adam to your Beauty

I used to be a Beast,

Always reprimanded by the police.

Wondering and thinking: “Who could ever love a beast, an animal like me?”

But Princess Belle

Did and does

That has to be you because regardless of what they may say, you’re not a Wicked Witch

This is true love, not some Spell

Your beauty transcends

Your heart is made of compassion, and I depend

On you

Because you're always there

I know you know that you're better than I deserve

You and I serve

One another, like the Bible says

Our love is “a tale as old as time!”

So I write and write for you

Please accept this poem, my darling love

Only Jesus could love you more than I

Remember, in my darkest days, you will always be my sun

So until we meet again, to end said poem (in my mother’s tongue),

I bid you ti amo: I love you.
